“ One year ago...

One year ago my son went home to be with the Lord. Life could never have prepared me for something so unnatural to us as human beings, the loss of a child. I never imagined I would have to learn how to live while carrying a pain that no words could ever fully describe.

I have learned that no two losses are alike, and even grief itself changes. One year ago I cried differently than I cry today. The tears now come from a place of deep yearning, of missing him, of love still searching for somewhere to go.

My son was truly a light. I treasure every conversation, every laugh, and especially every time he would ask, “Mom, how ya holding up?” Those words live in my heart.

Today, even though my heart has been forever transformed and will never return to what it once was, I am so incredibly proud of my son and the life he lived. I carry him with me—in love, in memory, and in faith—always.

One year ago...

“ Derrick was an amazing son. He was very special to our family. He had a quiet strength that was evident to everyone he came across. He was full of love for his family and to those that needed a helping hand he provided support. I miss him tremendously. Until we meet again rest in God's care. My love will never end. May God continue to strengthen and keep our family.

Always a pleasant guy and kind. He was great to talk to. Our profession has lost a bright light. We pray for comfort for his colleagues and those that he associated with.*
