“ The other day I was driving and they were cracking jokes on the radio and they were talking about how everybody had that uncle that always lived in your basement and I started cracking up and I was like yes uncle Clain, he lived with us every where we moved. The first time I ever got jacked up was by him because I was saying in the register to the basement “Clain mean, Clain mean”, next thing I knew he had me by the collar and my feet were off the floor, lol.... a lot of history with this uncle here. He turned me on to a lot of great music, certain songs I'd listen to reminded me of him, and now they really will especially Jean Carne, don't let it go to your head. I went to see him in the hospital the day before he died, and now all I keep seeing is the look in his eyes as we were leaving, it looked as if he wanted to say where are you going don't leave me! I'm really sadden by this loss, just know this man here really had nine lives, he was a fighter til the end
